DICKENS' SCENES AND PORTRAITS.-The London Daily News, in reviewing Forster's Life of Dickens, says:

The publication of Mr. Forster's "first volume" will almost prove as great a surprise to the world as the first appearance of the first story which won fame for the subject of the biography. No one ever doubted that Mr. Dickens drew from actual observation and experience many of the characters and scenes of his novels. But no one suspected that he had actually lived through so many of the most painful experiences which moistened the eyes of those who, reading of them in the pages of fiction, believed them to be only the imaginary sufferings of a novelist's hero. We now learn for the first time as a certainty that Dickens actually knew the very depths of poverty. It was he, and not David Copperfield, who sorted the bottles, and was half starved and shabby, and ashamed of himself for the company which he found himself compelled to keep. It was he who wandered through London streets a poor little social outcast. Now for the first time we seem to have learned the secret of the individuality belonging to all of Dickens' really great novels. The effect of the exaggerated care which surrounded the childhood of Montaigne with luxury, which wakened him in the morning with music, and made his early life a soft holiday, is not more evident in his easy, pleasant, happy-valley meditations, than is the schooling of that episode of London poverty visible in the best writings of Dickens. It would hardly be too much to say that in that period Dickens accumulated his whole that period Dickens accumulated his whole stock of materials, his entire outfit for his E. career of fortune and of fame. It was the intensely healthy and manly moral nature of the boy, contrasting so much at times with his physical condition, that kept him sinking artistically into cynicism and despondency, as it kept him from plunging individually into recktors.

Nos. 5 and 7 South Fairfux st., tistically into cynicism and despondency, as it kept him from plunging individually into recklessness and debasement.

All that is striking, enduring, celebrated in Dickens' books would seem to have been simply transferred there bodily out of real life. All that is weak, defective and evanescent in the way of portraiture or reflection, came from that inner consciousness which people once called WINDOW GLASS AND PUTTY. imagination. For ourselves, however, we shall not cease to believe that the ideal, as well as the real, must go into a truly great work of art, even though David Copperfield and Micawber ween though David Copperfield and Micawber are pictures taken from models that then lived.

We are still convinced that Shakspeare never knew Hamlet in the flesh, and that Faust never walked the streets of Frankfort, Leipare pictures taken from models that then lived. never walked the streets of Frankfort, Leipsig or Weimar.

THE NEW MYSTERY .- The spectral "face on the window pane," which has been flitting here and there through the country, has reached San Francisco. In the case of the manifesta tion in that city, however, two ghosts are perceptible on two different panes. One appeared upon a window in the second story of a dwelling on North Beach, the house being occupied by a widow, who puts in the pathetic claim that the face-that of an elderly man of melancholy expression-is the face of her late husband. The newspapers having given glowing and picturesqe accounts of this apparition, large crowds assembled before the house to wonder at the spectacle. But that day was destined-although not strictly speaking, a good day for ghosts, to be a memorable one in the ghost annals of San Francisco. The fact having become public that the bereaved widow, with praiseworthy ingenuity, had turned her late husband's "counterfeit presentment" to some account, by disposing of it for the goodly sum of $10,000, the multitude had attended, to take one last look at the face which was soon to pass into the pos-session of an other. Strangely enough, how-ever, the face was no longer visible; but, while the people were wondering at the cause of this evanishment, tidings were brought to it that another ghost was visible on the pane of a window in a house just around the corner. Here was truly an embarras of ghosts, and so all the crowd rushed to the rival house, to gaze upon the apparition of "a nice-appearing" youth, of a lively turn of feature, whose "hair," continues the local reporter, "was parted in the centre, and fell in short, graceful curls; he wore a moustache and imperial, a strait shirt collar, and a black neck-tie." The person on whose window-pane this spectre has appeared, is said to be a well-known citizen, who has lived in the house for eight years. Committees of investigation, the San Francisco papers say, are to examine into the causes of so much mystery. -- Washington Patriot.

A CURE FOR EARACHE.—We have recently seen several recipies published as beneficial in case of earache; but one who has a severe attack of that malady will, we think, soon find the inefficiency of them all. There is, however, one remedy which the experience of twenty years has taught us is unfalling. We have seen it repeatedly tried in our own family, and have frequently recommended it to others, always with the same satisfactory result.

No house should be without its bottle of arnica. It is indispensable in cases of cuts, burns and bruises, and in earache it is a sovereign cure. As soon as any soreness is felt in the ear-which feeling almost always precedes the regular "ache"-let three or four drops of tincture of arnica be ponred in, and then the orifice filled with a little cotton to exclude the are; and in a short time the uneasiness is forgotten. If the arnica is not resorted to until there is actual pain, the cure may not be so speedy, but it is just as certain. If one application of the arnica does not effect a cure it will be necessary to repeat it, it may be several times. It is a sure preventive of gathering in rious inconvenience to attend this use of arnica; though if the spirits with which it is made are very strong, it may be diluted with a little water, as the spirits-not the arnica-will sometimes cause a temporary dizziness of the head, which
